I always enjoy the holidays. One of my happiest memories is about a snowy night just before Christmas. As the hall clock struck nine, there was a loud knock at the door. “Who could it be?” we wondered. My father went to the door, and in a surprised voice we heard, “Oh, my... look who’s here!” We all ran to the hall, and there was my favorite uncle with his arms full of gifts. He surprised us with a visit. Then, he helped us decorate our Christmas tree. We had so much fun.

① There are so many books to choose from, but one I think would be good is a science fiction novel, Exploring Space and Beyond , that was published last month. It can be read in one sitting because it’s just 150 pages long.
② I read a review online about a book that was published earlier this year, titled Farming as a Family . It’s a true story about a man who decided to move with his family to the countryside to farm. It’s an easy read... around 200 pages.
③ I know a really good autobiography called My Life as a Pop Star . It’s 300 pages in length. I think it would be an interesting discussion topic for our group. I learned a lot when I read it several years ago.
④ I heard about a new book, Winning at the Olympics . It features Olympic athletes who won medals. It has so many interesting photographs and some really amazing true-life stories. It’s 275 pages long.

Questions No. 27 to 32

Today I'll introduce a recent work model based on "gig work." Do you know this term? This model utilizes the spread of smartphones and the internet. It enables businesses to connect with and hire freelance workers through digital platforms. These workers are called gig workers, who do individual jobs, or gigs, on short-term contracts.

Let's look at some benefits of the gig work model. This model is attractive to companies because they can save on operating costs, and they can easily hire a more skilled workforce through digital platforms. The workers have the opportunity to control the numbers and types of projects according to their preferences, with the freedom to choose their schedule and workload. However, their income can be unstable because it is based on individual payments instead of a regular salary.

The gig work model is expanding to include various types of work. It has become common for local service jobs such as taxi and delivery drivers. There is now increasing demand for highly specialized project work, not only domestically but also internationally. For example, a company that needs help with its advertising can hire international consultants who work remotely in different countries. In fact, a large number of U.S. companies are already taking advantage of digital platforms to employ an international workforce.

The gig work model is challenging us to rethink the concepts of permanent employment, and full-time and part-time work. Working on a contract basis for multiple companies may give gig workers additional income while maintaining their work-life balance. As more and more people enter the gig job market, this work model will undoubtedly expand as a work model for future generations.

The growing effects of gig work on employment and markets differ regionally. Look at the two graphs containing data from the major English-language online labor platforms. They show the top five countries in terms of percentages of all gig employers and gig employees. What trend can we see here?

Julia: Oh, no. I'm out of butter. Tom: What are you making, Julia? Julia: I was going to make an omelet. Tom: How about using olive oil instead? Julia: But, Tom, the recipe says to use butter. Tom: Why don't you just change the recipe? Julia: I don't like cooking that way. Tom: I just throw together whatever is in the refrigerator. For me, cooking is a creative act. Julia: Not for me. I need to follow a recipe. Tom: I like to think about how the ingredients will combine. Julia: I don't have to think about it if I follow a recipe precisely. I use measuring spoons, a measuring cup, and a step-by-step recipe. You like my food, don't you? Tom: Absolutely. Your beef stew is especially delicious. Julia: See? There is something to be said for sticking to a plan. And without butter I cannot make an omelet. Tom: OK. So, what are you going to do with those eggs? Julia: How about boiled eggs? Questions No. 36 and 37

Anne: Hey, Brian. Look at that beautiful red coral necklace. Ooh... expensive.

Brian: Anne, red coral is endangered. They shouldn't be selling that.

Anne: So, how are they going to make money?

Brian: There're lots of ways to do that if we consider ecotourism.

Anne: Yeah... ecotourism.... What do you think, Donna?

Donna: Well, Anne, ecotourism supports the local economy in a good way while protecting the environment.

Brian: Right. So, we shouldn't buy coral; it'll become extinct.

Anne: Oh, come on, Brian. How about the people relying on the coral reefs?

Brian: But, Anne, those coral reefs take millions of years to regrow. We should support more sustainable ways to make money.

Donna: Hey Hiro, didn't you buy some photos of coral reefs?

Hiro: Yeah, taken by a local photographer. They are beautiful.

Donna: That's ecotourism. We shouldn't impact the environment so much.

Hiro: But that's not enough to support people relying on coral reefs for income.

Brian: Hiro has a point. They should find other ways to make money while still preserving the reefs.

Anne: I'm not sure if we are in a position to tell them how they should make their money.

Hiro: Anne's right. Selling coral is their local tradition. We should respect that.

Donna: But, at the expense of the environment, Hiro?

Hiro: The environment is important, but if we protect it, I don't think the economy is supported.

Brian: Anyway, we're on vacation. It's a nice day.

Donna: Let's hit the beach!
